Do you find it difficult to maintain your faith, when: a new trial is granted because the indictment said "Smith and Weston" revolver instead of "Smith and Wesson"; a case is reversed because the verdict said "guilty as charged" and failed to state the amount stolen; a conviction on 50 counts is set aside because one count charged the defendant as "Holdberg" instead of "Goldberg"; an indictment is quashed because one of the prosecuting officers was present in the Grand Jury room during part of the deliberations; judges privately state that the case had the appearance of a "frame-up," but officially declare that the decision must be sustained because there is nothing to indicate that the trial court abused its discretion?
